planned for this year's summer festival

4th Annual Festival and Sustainability Expo coming July 5 and 6, 2008

Victoria BC, April 22, 2008 - "It's getting easier being green." That's the message Deb Morse, Director of the Organic Islands Festival and Sustainability Expo would like people on Vancouver Island to know. As more and more people are aware of the impact individual choices can make on the environment, she is finding businesses focusing on sustainable products and services are becoming more prevalent.

"It is a lot easier now to choose foods, health products, energy sources, even furniture that leave a smaller footprint," says Morse, the founder and programmer of the popular Victoria area event.

Each year we are finding more diverse exhibitors that bring such a wealth of choices to people here on Vancouver Island. In addition to our new Sustainability Expo, exhibitors this year include everything from eco furniture to organic pet food and solar energy providers; innovative companies that provide new products like superfast garden composters, and biodegradable plastics, as well as wild food demonstrations and recipes for a cool planet.

The festival takes place at Glendale Gardens and Woodland in Victoria, a beautiful setting where event visitors will enjoy musical entertainment, chef's demonstrations and tastings from local organic farms as well as informative displays/demos by exhibitors who are on the forefront of the sustainability and organics movement. Learn how to have a Pocket Market in your community and gain direct access to local food and products in your neighbourhood or have F.U.N. at the main stage with Carolyn Herriot engaging in a panel discussion on Farming in Urban Neighbourhoods.
